Action Line

Please forward my sincere thanks for being here in Aurora. I've been a resident for the last 24 years and through the years, I've enjoyed the occasional fly overs by many different aircraft. I think of it as my own little air show, and I've always rushed to the backyard and watched with joy and admiration. Yes I'm a United States Air Force veteran, class of 61-65. Today I watched as the F-16s flew back from their fly over at Ft. Logan and then, I think, two Navy EA-6s came over loud and clear. Occasionally, I hear the bugle at sunrise and sunset, and it takes me back.

Thanks for being here, and thanks for your commitment to our security and our community. Next time, let's hear some afterburners, let's hear the sound of freedom!

Sincerely, Craig

Significance of the 460th Mission Support Squadron emblem

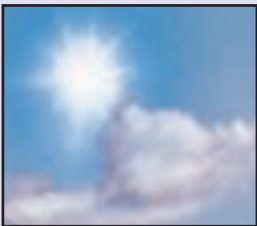

Blue and yellow are the Air Force colors. Blue alludes to the sky, the primary theater of Air Force operations. Yellow refers to the sun and the excellence required of Air Force personnel. The four pillars refer to the four military components (Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Air Force) that the unit supports. The sword depicts the unit's strength and resolve to provide a multitude of personnel services to the military's active duty, civilian and retiree community. The globe symbolizes the impact unit personnel have on mission readiness and worldwide military operations.

Civil Engineers step up during inclement weather

By Airman 1st Class Chris Smith
460th Public Affairs

Everybody at Buckley has probably seen their share of snow. Many people are unaware of all the work that takes place to ensure when snow falls it's not too inconvenient.

The 460th Civil Engineering Squadron (CES) knows. When the snow starts falling and many of us go home, CES stays behind to make sure Buckley keeps moving.

"During the winter months (October through April), CES combines resources and personnel from all specialties within the organization to establish a 24-hour, seven days-a-week snow removal capability," said Master Sgt. Sylvain Tardif, horizontal maintenance non-commissioned officer in charge.

Sylvain said personnel within CES are divided into shifts and sometimes rotate from days to nights when necessary to get snow removed from roadways and parking lots.

The process of snow operations begins with the forecast of snow and how much is expected.

"If base weather is projecting snow, CES activates a snow watch (two people) or snow shifts (all CES), depending on how much snow is projected," said Sylvain.

Sylvain said if only light snow is projected, a chemical pre-treatment is applied to the asphalt to melt the snow when it touches to the ground. This process keeps snow from accumulating for up to an inch of snow.

If more than an inch of snow is projected, CES begins plowing until the snow has stopped and all required areas are clear. Following an average snowfall, most or all areas are clear within eight to 10 hours after the snow stops falling.

Sylvain said that as a part of Team Buckley, CES is always ready to step up to the task during inclement weather to ensure mission accomplishment.

The following are some helpful tips to help CES serve Team Buckley and get the job done faster.

- ♦Snow removal vehicles have priority, so please give them the right of way.

- ♦Stay at least 50 feet behind snow removal vehicles.

- ♦Do not pass on the right side of a snow removal vehicle.

- ♦Members who are deployed or on a temporary duty assignment should park their vehicles at the end of a parking lot rather than in the middle.

Airmen from the 460th Civil Engineer Squadron work to clear the parking lot at Bldg. 606 after Tuesday night's snowfall. CES members sometimes work 24-hour operations to clear snow after some large storms.

- ♦Sidewalks within 100 feet of a facility are the responsibility of facility managers.

When not performing snow operations, CES maintains and repairs base pavements, facilities, traffic signs and utilities, according to Sylvain.

During inclement weather situations, there is a phone number for Buckley personnel to call to check on weather conditions.

"Tuesday was the first time we instituted the snow line this year," said John Spann, chief, Public Affairs for the 460th Air Base Wing. "Our intention is to have it updated by 4:30 a.m. with inclement weather information. Whether it's updates on road conditions, delayed reporting or base closure. Personnel should also listen or watch for weather information on radio or television stations."

The number for Buckley's Snow Call Line is 303-677-SNOW.

Many methods available to support American servicemembers

Courtesy of
460th Public Affairs

With the holidays coming up the base public affairs office and family support center are receiving several calls a day from area residents and businesses who want to collect things and ship to the troops deployed overseas.

Base officials are advising them not to for several reasons.

People are asked not to flood the military mail system with letters, cards and gifts. Due to security concerns and transportation constraints, the Department of Defense and the U.S. Postal Service cannot accept items to be mailed to "Any Service Member."

Some people have tried to avoid this prohibition by sending large numbers of packages to an individual service member's address, which however well intentioned, clogs the mail and causes unnecessary delays. The support and generosity of the American people has touched the lives of many service members, over 300,000 of whom are deployed overseas.

The "Any Service Member" mail program was suspended last year because of the anthrax attacks. Anyone wishing to correspond with "Any Service Member" or to help service members stay in touch with their families may do so by using electronic means.

There are several ways people can show their support by logging on to the some of the following web sites. There may be others we are not aware of. Some .mil sites may or may not be available to the general public.

A Pentagon Web site, www.defendamerica.mil/support_troops.html, offers information on collective efforts to boost military morale. There are numerous hotlinks to these and other web sites.

To contact service members use the following sites:

Send a greeting to deployed troops through the Web site: www.anyservice-member.org/. To date over 300,000 visitors have logged on to read or send messages.

Donate a calling card to service members in theater through operation uplink at:

www.operationuplink.org/.

Purchase commissary gift cards at www.commissaries.com.

Send a greeting via e-mail through operation Dear Abby at www.operationdearabby.net/.

Sign a virtual thank you card at the defend America web site at www.defendamerica.mil/.

Make a donation to one of the military relief societies:

Army Emergency Relief at www.aerhq.org/

Navy/Marine Relief Society at www.nmcra.org/

Air Force Aid Society at www.afas.org/

Package at www.usometrodc.org/care.html.

Donate your frequent flyer miles to military members who are going on a rest and relaxation trips or on emergency leave status at www.heromiles.org.

Support the American Red Cross armed forces emergency services at www.redcross.org/services/afes/.

Other options:

If anyone wants to put care packages together for the troops overseas please tell them to contact the Red Cross. The Red Cross provides incredible assistance to soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines deployed overseas.

How do your day-to-day duties contribute to mission success?

Ensuring all personnel are taken care of through personal finances, mission and unit budget and training and mentoring junior members to become a cohesive unit and team.

If you could change one thing about the Air Force, what would it be?

The Air Force has made great strides in technology and quality of life issues, but educating members on the things that separate us from the civilian community—customs and courtesies, discipline and respect and enforcing the standards—seem to be something of the past. I would like to see these standards “Re-Blued”.

What has been your most memorable experience in the Air Force?

Needless to say, meeting President Bush was quite an experience and being involved in events such as Desert Storm, Desert Watch and 9/11 are at the top of the list, but the one that always comes to me was a previous subordinate that I hadn’t seen in a long time called me one night for help and guidance. Makes you think you did something right.

'Air Force Family' makes military service rewarding

By Maj. Donald Clocksin
460th Comptroller Flight commander

Today, the comptroller flight will be enjoying a few hours together at our annual holiday party. It will be a nice way to spend time outside the office with the people we work with almost everyday.

These outside-the-office gatherings are important for our organization and the Air Force as a whole. They help to instill the "Air Force Family" value system that makes serving in the Air Force so much more rewarding then typical jobs. The interactions we have, during and outside the normal day, help to build a strong bond; a sense of community.

This sense of community is felt each time we send one of our own on a deployment and those remaining behind take care of the deployed member's family. It is felt when the unit sends care packages and keeps the deployed member informed on what is going on back home. It is felt when we move to a new duty station and instantly have others who can readily relate to the challenges we face.

Our children feel it as well when they find other military dependents at their new schools that understand what it feels like to be the new kid on the block. Most importantly, it is felt during times of crisis, need or loss.

This "Air Force Family" is a wonderful benefit we gain by becoming members of the greatest Air Force in the world. But it isn't guaranteed. It takes involvement in your organization.

Being part of the Air Force is special, different from most organizations. I think it might be difficult for those who have never been a part of an organization like the Air Force to understand. We do things to build morale, teamwork and camaraderie.

Why? Because we ask our folks to go places and do things that put them in harm's way. Places that take them away from their families. Places that challenge them to give their very best, and in some cases, their lives.

As we enter the holiday season, I want to encourage everyone to take a moment to examine their involvement within your organization. Are you helping to build unit morale? Are you contributing to the sense of community referenced above?

I have personally experienced the benefits of the "Air Force Family," as I am sure many of you have. It is up to each of us to keep this wonderful benefit alive. Get involved. You will enjoy it and you just might make someone else feel a part of our wonderful "Air Force Family."

What wearing the Air Force uniform means for one airman

By Airman 1st Class Christopher Kobernuss
97th Logistics Readiness Squadron

ALTUS AIR FORCE BASE, Okla. -- On the way from my home in Ohio to San Antonio where I was about to begin basic training, I kept looking out the window thinking to myself, "I'm really doing this. My family will be so proud. My wife and daughter can sleep easy knowing that I will protect them."

As my flight landed, a little boy behind me was looking out the window. He turned to his mother and asked where the bombs were. His mother told him there were no bombs on this kind of plane. Then he asked, "Who's going to protect us if there's no bombs?" His mom said, "Honey, there's somebody out there to protect us."

That made me realize that my family wasn't the only family relying on me for protection. I have a much bigger family now.

My uniform means protection.

My uniform means people will not have to wonder who will keep them safe.

My uniform means our families will not have to worry about suicide car bombings or guerilla attacks in our streets.

My uniform means freedom.

My uniform means servicemembers before me gave me the freedom to choose.

My uniform means it's my turn to ensure people after me have that same freedom.

My uniform means honor.

My family and I were visiting Sea World at the end of basic training. A woman came up to me and grabbed my arm. She said, "Don't think I'm crazy but I want to thank you for what you're doing. You have no idea what this means to me.

I really appreciate what you're doing for our country." Then she thanked me again and shook my hand.

My uniform means pride.

How many people wake up in the morning and know they are a part of the greatest force in the world? How many of them put on their uniform and know everybody in the world is watching them? I know there is no uniform that attracts attention as much as mine does. This is the last uniform I'll ever wear. I know every time I put on my uniform I will look sharp and professional.

My uniform means courage.

When the time comes and it's my turn, I'll be able to take the training I've received and perform in a hostile environment. I'll put on my uniform and know it means I'll be able to help people who can't help themselves. When I put my uniform on, it means I'm willing to get in harm's way and protect what I believe in.

When I put on this uniform, it means my wingman can trust me with his or her life, and I will trust him with mine.
